Mrs. Brown loves flowers and has a small beautiful garden. In the summer her roses are always the best in her street.

One summer afternoon her bell rings. She opens the door and sees a small boy outside. He is about seven years old.

He is holding many beautiful roses in his hands. "I am selling roses" he says, "Do you want to buy them? They are very cheap, only two shekels for all of them. They are fresh, I picked them this afternoon."

"My boy, Mrs. Brown answers, "I can pick roses every day. I don't pay money for them because I have a lot of roses in my garden."

"Oh no you don't!" The small boy says. "There are no roses in your garden-because they are here in my hand."
